ATLANTA, Feb. 6, 2026 – Cox Automotive named Chuck Hutton Toyota the 2026 Leader in Sustainability Award recipient, recognizing the Memphis dealership's off-grid solar operations and its Electri-CITY Park, a first-of-its-kind EV charging destination with amenities for drivers, families and remote workers. The award was presented by Ken Kraft, chief marketing and sales officer at Cox Automotive, at the NADA Show in Las Vegas, on Thursday, Feb. 5.

Electri-CITY Park, located on the Chuck Hutton Toyota campus, is powered by a 350-kilowatt solar farm that supplies renewable energy to the entire dealership, including EV charging stations. Low-impact groundskeeping – Valais Blacknose sheep that graze beneath the panels – reduces the need for fossil fuel landscaping and supports biodiversity on site.

Beyond charging, Electri-CITY Park turns “refueling time” into quality time. The park features a climate-controlled lounge, soundproof work pods for remote workers, a children’s play area, a dog park and a golf simulator, as well as outdoor amenities including a walking track and Camry Field, a multipurpose turf field designed with pro-grade surfacing.

“We are proud to recognize Chuck Hutton Toyota as the 2026 Cox Automotive Leader in Sustainability Award recipient,” said Kraft. “Young Kim and his team are setting a strong example for how dealerships can lead on sustainability while creating lasting value for their customers, their communities and the industry.”

Young Kim's Leadership and the Rise of YK Auto Group

Young Kim, owner/president of YK Auto Group and Chuck Hutton Toyota, blends an electrical engineering background with more than two decades in automotive retail. He joined Chuck Hutton Toyota in 2005. Over time, Kim led sales, used car and general sales operations before becoming general manager in 2018. In 2020, Kim purchased the store and, three years later, formed YK Auto Group to support growth and innovation across his enterprises. Under his leadership, the dealership now averages more than $150 million in annual revenue, has placed in Toyota Certified's Top 20, and has earned the President's Award multiple years.

Kim envisioned Electri-CITY Park as a practical answer to EV charging concerns and as a community asset. Unveiled on Earth Day 2025, the park is free to the public during dealership hours. The project drew broad community support at its opening and showcases how a dealer can combine renewable power, thoughtful design and hospitality to create a better charging experience. In recognition of its outstanding in-dealership sustainability programs and its community service, Chuck Hutton Toyota will receive $10,000 to fund a sustainability project.

“It’s an honor to be recognized by Cox Automotive,” said Kim. “When I thought about doing this, I didn’t think about winning awards or recognition. I thought about the future, and how I could leave my community better than I found it. The award helps us achieve that.”
